

Japanese Society of Dysphagia Rehabilitation

The Japanese Society of Dysphagia Rehabilitation (JSDR) was established in 1995 as a unique society emphasizing a transdisciplinary approach of dysphagia rehabilitation.

The objective of the society is to perform activities including research, education, popularization, and structuralization in dysphagia rehabilitation to facilitate resolving the problems in individuals with eating and swallowing difficulties.

The JSDR started with 1,600 members in 1996 and has been expanding its size rapidly. The JSDR has now over 15,000 members (Figure1). Multiple professionals participate in the society including physicians, dentists, speech therapists, nurses, dieticians (Figure2).
